The Neuroscientific Challenge To Criminal Responsibility

Stephen J. Morse, JD, PhD

Dr. Stephen Morse is an expert in criminal and mental health law, whose work emphasizes individual responsibility and the relationship of the behavioral and neurosciences to responsibility and social control. Dr. Morse has published Foundations of Criminal Law (Foundations Press, with Leo Katz and Michael S. Moore), and he is currently working on a book, Desert and Disease: Responsibility and Prediction. He is a Diplomate in Forensic Psychology of the American Board of Professional Psychology-Law Society, a recipient of the American Academy of Forensic Psychology's Distinguished Contribution Award, a member of the MacArthur Foundation Research Network on Mental Health and Law (1988-1996); a founding director of the Neuroethics Society, and a trustee of the Bazelon Center for Mental Health Law in Washington, DC (1995-present). Prior to joining the Penn faculty in 1998, Morse was the Orrin B. Evans Professor of Law, Psychiatry and the Behavioral Sciences at the University of Southern California. He has served as a Visiting Professor at a number of institutions, including the California Institute of Technology, Cardozo School of Law, Georgetown Law Center, and University of Virginia School of Law.

Mental Health Advocacy, Legislation, and Reform

Congressman Patrick J. Kennedy will discuss his experience advancing mental health legislation, including the recent passage of the Paul Wellstone and Pete Domenici Mental Health Parity and Addiction Equity Act of 2008. The new law requires business with 50 or more employees and health insurance benefits to provide coverage for mental health treatment that is equal to the coverage offered for other health concerns. Congressman Kennedy, with the support of Jim Ramstad, was a primary sponsor of this bill as H.R. 1424 in the U.S. House of Representatives. A similar bill was introduced in the Senate, and through negotiations between the House and the Senate, a single final bill was agreed upon. The final version was included as part of the large-scale "bailout" bill, the Emergency Economic Stabilization Act, which became law in October 2008. Congressman Kennedy will describe his work in helping to get the parity law enacted, and he will also describe current mental health initiatives and areas in need of reform.

COURSES

The Detection of Malingered Mental Illness

This course is designed to give psychiatrists practical advice about the detection of malingering and lying. Faculty will summarize recent research and describe approaches to suspected malingering in criminal defendants. Characteristics of true hallucinations will be contrasted with simulated hallucinations. Dr. Resnick will discuss faked amnesia, mental retardation, depression, and the reluctance of psychiatrists to diagnose malingering. The limitations of the clinical interview, psychological testing, hypnosis, and the sodium-amytal interview in detecting malingering will be covered. The course will delineate twelve clues to malingered psychosis, and five signs of malingered insanity defenses. Videotapes of four defendants describing hallucinations will enable participants to assess their skills in distinguishing between true and feigned mental disease. Participants will also have a written exercise to assess a plaintiff alleging PTSD. Handouts will cover the so-called "compensation neurosis," malingered mutism, and feigned post-traumatic stress disorder in combat veterans.

Phillip J. Resnick, MD

Stalking Risk Assessment and Prevention: Theory to Practice

Over the past several decades, stalking research has provided helpful information allowing forensic psychiatrists to more objectively assess stalker typology, evaluate violence risk, and make recommendations to an anti-stalking team. This course will be taught by experienced educators who have published in the area of stalking. It will begin by covering the most recent, or "state of the art" knowledge about stalking behavior and victimization. A comprehensive discussion of risk factors will be followed by the presentation of a newly developed structured clinical guide, the "Stalking HARM", that has been designed to serve as an aide-memoire to qualified experts who are charged with predicting violence in stalkers. Case examples will be used to illustrate how evidenced-based data can be used to examine stalkers' threatening communications, and make helpful recommendations to law enforcement and victims. There will be significant audience participation, a video vignette of a Fox News anchor who was stalked and sought consultation with the presenters will discuss her experience, what steps she took, and what she ultimately found helpful. A veteran police detective and private investigator will discuss the wide-ranging security issues, and how forensic psychiatrists can best assist law enforcement.
