

American Academy of Psychiatry and the Law Forensic Psychiatry Self-Assessment Examination

The goal of the American Academy of Psychiatry and the Law's Forensic Psychiatry Self-Assessment Examination is to provide information and feedback on individual competence and performance in current best practices in forensic psychiatry, as well as comparison to peers.

The AAPL MOC Self-Assessment Exam is released 4 times per year. Approximately January, April, July and October. Participants will have 30 days from the exam release date to complete the online test, it can be done in one sitting or at will. A link to the test with a username and password will be emailed when the test is open to those who have signed up for the particular exam. Note there is no study guide to accompany this test.

Those who receive a passing score of 51% will receive a CME certificate for 24 AMA PRA Category 1 Credit(s)TM. Certificates will be mailed after the exam deadline.

Important Reminder: You may take the Self-Assessment Exam more than once but you are only allowed to claim the CME credit (24.0 hours) once every three years.
